

FIND GAMBLING OUTFIT, BUT LET OWNER GO FREE

Barkeeper at Gannon's Resort
Arrested, but Proprietor
Unmolested.

PARAPHERNALIA SEIZED.

Peculiar Line of Conduct After Raid on Place Supposed to Be Gaming-House.

Although it is admitted that a great store of gambling appliances were found early to-day in the saloon-hotel of James Gannon, the former captain of police, who was dropped from the force for his failure to close disorderly houses, the somewhat unusual statement has been issued from the Tenderloin station that there is no warrant for Gannon and that no attempt is being made to find him. It is true that his bar-keeper, Patrick Dacy, was looked up after Gannon had slipped away from his place, which is at Sixth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, but the only charge that has been entered on the station house blotter is opposite the name of Dacy, the scapegoat, and not opposite the name of Gannon, the vanished.

Under the circumstances, it is believed that Commissioner Bingham will be very apt to call on the raiding party and their superior officer, Capt. McClusky, the commander of the precinct, for a full explanation of the failure to take Gannon into custody.

Pilots the Raiders.
By some means word came to McClusky's ears that gambling was running full blast with the mufflers off at Gannon's house. Soon after midnight he started three of his plain clothes men, headed by Detective Conlon, for the corner of Twenty-ninth street and Sixth avenue, to search the premises.

The four investigators found Gannon in the saloon. According to McClusky's account of their report to him, he denied that any gambling ever went on under his roof and volunteered to show them through the building.

But Conlon noticed that Gannon passed by one room on the second floor—the room at the front directly over the bar. As they passed this room, Conlon back downstairs after a tour of all the floors Conlon said:

"How about this room?"
"Merely my sleeping quarters," said Gannon easily. "I forgot about that."

"Well, we'll just look into it," said Conlon.

"I'll go for the key," Conlon says. Gannon said, and he went downstairs, alone, presumably for the key.

Paraphernalia Seized.
Then, according to McClusky's narrative, the four detectives decided to have a look at once. They put their shoulders to the door and lifted it off the hinges.

The room was full of gambling furniture, including a roulette wheel, kiosk-like table, a faro lay-out, several craps tables and thousands of chips. Most of the stuff was slunked up and it was stuffy, showing it had not been in use for several days at least.

Still the detectives made no arrests. Conlon sent one of his men, Whalen, around to the station to report what they had found and to ask for instructions.

"I sent word back to them," said Capt. McClusky to-day, "that they were to seize all the stuff and bring Gannon over here to the station-house."

But when Whalen got back to Conlon with the message Gannon had disappeared. So the raiders arrested Dacy, the barkeeper, on the somewhat involved charge of harboring gambling appliances. Inasmuch as Dacy is not the manager, there is little prospect that he can be prosecuted, even admitting that the charge against him is a legal and proper one.

There is no general alarm out for Gannon, and if a report to that effect is what keeps him in hiding he might as well come back to his place and be comfortable again.

Other Raids Made.
McClusky then continued raiding. He and his detectives entered two alleged disorderly houses. The first was in Thirty-third street between Sixth and Seventh avenues, where they arrested Rose Levine, charging her with being the proprietor. The next house was in Sixth avenue, where Annie Schmidt and seven inmates were arrested.

Then dawn McClusky and half a dozen detectives battered down the door of a four-story house in West Twenty-sixth street and arrested three men, besides recovering a roulette wheel and table and a faro lay-out.
The prisoners described themselves as follows: Joseph Conlon, thirty-five years, of No. 22 West Twenty-sixth street; Fred Carter, thirty-one years, of No. 21 West Twenty-sixth street; and John Matthews, forty-seven, a negro, of No. 21 West Twenty-sixth street. One was charged with keeping and maintaining a gambling-house, and the other two men, the negro being the barkeeper, were charged with aiding and abetting Conlon.

More than a thousand chips used at roulette were recovered.

COTOPAXI ACTIVE CAUSES A TREMBOR

People of Ecuador in Alarm
Over Behavior of Volcanic Mountain.

QUAYACUIL, Ecuador, June 11.—A violent earthquake of considerable duration was felt in this city at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon and caused panic among the people.

The quake is attributed to the activity of Mount Cotopaxi, which is throwing out great quantities of stones. Flames also are shooting up from the volcano and can be seen from afar. The disturbance is accompanied by loud explosions that are heard at a long distance. The inhabitants of the town of Latacunga are greatly alarmed at the activity of the volcano.

COURT RULES FOR SCHMITZ.

Mass of Testimony Barred, and State Suddenly Rests Case.
SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Following a decision by Judge Dunne that relative testimony could not be given to prove criminal intent in the case at bar, the prosecution yesterday suddenly closed its case against Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz, on trial for conspiracy to extort money from French restaurants.

Abraham Ruef will not be called by the State to testify against the Mayor, according to Prosecutor Heney.

ACCUSED OF MURDER.

BEAVER, Pa., June 11.—Harry Gillen, charged with the murder of Lewis Nye, a non-union workman, has been placed on trial. Nye was shot to death from ambush last August while guarding a bridge the Pittsburgh Railway Company was erecting at Legionville, Pa. The company was having trouble with striking union steel workers and feared an attempt to dynamite the bridge.

SUIT OVER FAIR'S GIFT TO ACTRESS

Diamond Bow Knot Had Been Presented to Kitty Wells
by Californian.

A bow knot of diamonds, given to a pretty actress by the late Charles L. Fair, and by her given to her chambermaid and fellow actress when on her way to a hospital to be operated upon for appendicitis—from which she died—was the bone of contention in the West Fifty-fourth Street Municipal Court. It was to-day the subject of a decision by three learned Justices—Gildemeister, Fitzgerald and Coffin—in the Appellate Term of the Supreme Court.

John A. Dixon, who keeps a hotel in Pittsburg, sued Elizabeth Marlow, an actress, as administratrix of the estate of his sister, Kitty Wells, to recover the diamond bow knot.
There was a great conflict of evidence upon every point connected with the bauble.

It was testified by one witness that Kitty Wells told her that "Charlie" Fair had given the bow knot to her in San Francisco. By another it was asserted that Mrs. Fair had given the diamonds to the actress. As both Mr. Fair, who was a brother of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and of Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and his wife were killed in an automobile accident in France in 1902, the disputed point was unsettled.

Miss Marlow testified that she and Kitty Wells were bosom companions for years, rooming together and playing in the same companies for three years. Last summer Kitty was attacked by appendicitis and went to a hospital for an operation.

"On the way to the hospital," said Miss Marlow, "Kitty unstashed the bow knot and handed it to me. She said: 'I have a premonition that I am going to die; you keep the bow-knot, and anything happens to me it is yours.'"

Miss Wells died Sept. 1, 1906, never recovering from the operation, and her brother, John A. Dixon, who was appointed administrator, sued Miss Marlow for the return of the bow-knot, the value of which is said to be $500.

"Where is the pin now?" Miss Marlow was asked.
"I gave it to a man," replied the actress. But she refused to tell the name and address of the "man," despite the pleadings of her counsel, Gustavus A. Rogers, until the Court brought her sharply to book by threatening to commit her for contempt if she did not answer. Then she blurted out:

"I gave the bow knot to George Richard, a commercial traveler, but I don't know his address, and have not seen him in a long time."

Mr. Dixon's complaint was dismissed on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain it, and an appeal was taken.

The three Justices in Appellate Term say that the evidence on every point was so conflicting that they must sustain the judgment dismissing the complaint and closed one of the points in conflict that "There was evidence that the plaintiff himself got the pin and that he gave it to another actress—Bertha Helveti."
